Excerpt: .to it, and never as anything supernatural. She told me of it some years after the war. In July, 1863, General Morgan made his famous raid into Ohio. Jim, Henry Massie, and myself were all members of his command. My father and mother were living with Aunt Key on Jefferson Street (south side), between First and Second, in Louisville. About the fifth or sixth of July, my mother and Aunt Key were sitting in the dining-room. My father came in, and addressing his sister said, Nellie, I have thoroughly investigated that report and find there is nothing in it. I have been to the Louisville and Nashville depot and have done all I can to trace the report to its origin, and I am satisfied it has no foundation. My mother said, What report? My father answered, A report came that Tom had been killed. I would not mention it to you till I had investigated it. I am satisfied now that it is without foundation. My mother said, It is not Tom--it is Jim; and I believe it is true. She then explained to them, as she afterward did to me, that on the fourth of July she was standing at her bureau, combing her hair, preparing for dinner. She saw no vision, but heard a voice behind her say distinctly, Jim has been killed. She looked around, startled in the highest degree: but there was no one there. She kept it to...
